Paid Leave Means
A Stronger South Carolina

FEBRUARY 2024

Most working people in the United States do not have paid family leave through their jobs, including about 76 percent — about 1,873,000 workers — in South Carolina. Even unpaid leave under the federal Family and Medical Leave Act is inaccessible for 64 percent of South Carolinians. The lack of paid leave exacerbates the state’s economic and care challenges — from the cost of living, to a scarcity of reproductive and maternal health care, to an aging population, with devastating costs for South Carolinians and their families, public health and the economy.

Impossible choices between work and family are hurting South Carolina’s economy, and women suffer most. Paid leave means people — especially women — aren’t forced to leave the labor force to care for their families or health.

> If women in South Carolina participated in the labor force at the same rate as women in countries with paid leave, there would be an estimated 82,000 additional workers in the state and $2.6 billion more wages earned statewide.
> Nationally, if women participated in the U.S. labor force at the same rate as in Germany and Canada, our economy would benefit from more than $775 billion in additional economic activity each year.
> In South Carolina, a typical worker who takes four weeks of unpaid leave loses more than nearly $3,000 in income.
> Paid leave improves employee retention, morale and productivity, reducing turnover for employers of all sizes and boosting the economy. But small employers often cannot provide the benefit — and universal paid leave would help them do that.

South Carolinians are caught between their work and family responsibilities. Paid leave means not having to choose between job and family.

> About 57,800 children are born in South Carolina each year, and in 71 percent of all South Carolina households with children — more than 746,000 homes — all parents report to work.
> Women’s wages support their households. In South Carolina, 81 percent of Black mothers, 42 percent of Latina mothers, 48 percent of white mothers and 47 percent of AAPI mothers are key family breadwinners.
State-level data is limited, but nationally 64 percent of Native American mothers are breadwinners.8

- Women make up nearly half South Carolina’s labor force (49 percent) and more than one-quarter of its business owners (28 percent).9
- Across the country, many men want to play a larger role in caring for their children, but unsupportive policies and stigma hold them back.10

South Carolina families’ care needs are increasing. Paid leave means older adults and disabled people can provide and receive care, and our care workforce is more resilient.

- Nearly one-quarter of South Carolina workers are 55 and older,11 and in the next 20 years, South Carolina’s population aged 65 and older will grow by 267,000.12
- Nationwide, nearly one third of all adults aged 55-64 — and 41 percent of older Black women and 43 percent of older Latinas — hold a physically demanding job,13 which may exacerbate or cause serious medical conditions that require care, particularly in older workers and workers with disabilities.14 In South Carolina, that would mean 125,100 older workers, 21,400 older Black women workers and 2,100 older Latina workers.15
- About 21 percent of South Carolina nursing homes have a shortage of direct care workers.16 Paid leave reduces nursing home utilization and can help recruitment and retention of care workers.17
- An estimated 496,000 South Carolinians report having long-term COVID-19 symptoms that affect their daily activities.18 Paid leave is a critical support as we continue through this mass disabling event, which disproportionately impacts women, people of color and workers with low incomes.19
- Paid leave helps family caregivers and disabled people (who are often caregivers themselves) manage their health and care needs while maintaining their income and employment.20

South Carolinians need a common sense, national paid leave program. We recommend one that:

- includes all workers, no matter where they live or work or what kind of job they have;
- replaces enough income that workers at any income level can afford leave;
- provides enough time and covers the range of major needs workers face, including addressing their own health conditions, caring for seriously ill, injured or disabled family members and welcoming newborn, newly adopted or foster children;
- provides education and outreach to ease implementation for workers and small businesses;
- has a sustainable funding source that is affordable for workers, employers and the government without harming other essential programs.

National paid family and medical leave means a stronger economy, healthier families and businesses, and greater equality for all women and families.

To learn more, visit NationalPartnership.org/PaidLeave.

2 divinitydatakids.org. (2023, March). Indicators of FMLA Eligibility and Affordability for Working Adults. Retrieved 16 January 2024, from Brandeis University, The Heller School, Institute for Child, Youth and Family Policy website https://data.divinitydatakids.org/dataset?vocab_Subtopic=FMLA&ga=2.1.4449139.551199344.1673292061-1693714331.1656615545; Workers are considered unable to take unpaid FMLA leave because they are either ineligible based on employer size or job tenure requirements or because 12 weeks of lost wages from unpaid leave would result in their family income dropping to or below 200 percent of the Supplemental Poverty Measure.

15 See note 3, U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics; National Partnership analysis of 2018-2022 American Community Survey accessed via IPUMS USA, University of Minnesota, www.ipums.org. Number of Black, non-Hispanic women and Hispanic/Latina women in the state’s labor force who are aged 55 to 64. We use a five-year dataset to have a sufficient sample size to analyze state-level data; due to pandemic-related labor force impacts in 2020 and 2021, this is a conservative estimate and we expect the population of older women workers to be higher in future years.

The National Partnership for Women & Families is a nonprofit, nonpartisan advocacy group dedicated to promoting fairness in the workplace, reproductive health and rights, access to quality, affordable health care and policies that help all people meet the dual demands of work and family. More information is available at NationalPartnership.org.

© 2024 National Partnership for Women & Families. All rights reserved.