Paid Leave Means
A Stronger Vermont

FEBRUARY 2024

Most working people in the United States do not have paid family leave through their jobs, including about 69 percent — about 241,000 workers — in Vermont.1 Even unpaid leave under the federal Family and Medical Leave Act is inaccessible for 66 percent of Vermonters.2 The lack of paid leave exacerbates the state’s economic and care challenges — from the cost of living to an aging population, with devastating costs for Vermonters and their families, public health and the economy.

Impossible choices between work and family are hurting Vermont’s economy, and women suffer most. Paid leave means people — especially women — aren’t forced to leave the labor force to care for their families or health.

- In Vermont, there is a four percentage-point gap in labor force participation between women and men.3
- Nationally, if women participated in the U.S. labor force at the same rate as in Germany and Canada, our economy would benefit from more than $775 billion in additional economic activity each year.4
- In Vermont, a typical worker who takes four weeks of unpaid leave loses more than $3,600 in income.5
- Paid leave improves employee retention, morale and productivity, reducing turnover for employers of all sizes and boosting the economy. But small employers often cannot provide the benefit — and universal paid leave would help them do that.6

Vermonters are caught between their work and family responsibilities. Paid leave means not having to choose between job and family.

- About 5,300 children are born in Vermont each year, and in 81 percent of all Vermont households with children — more than 87,000 homes — all parents report to work.7
- Women’s wages support their households. In Vermont, 58 percent of white mothers are key family breadwinners. State-level data is limited, but nationally 79 percent of Black mothers, 64 percent of Native American mothers, 49 percent of Latina mothers and 43 percent of AAPI mothers are key breadwinners.8

People in Vermont both work and provide care

Vermont’s economy and families are suffering
Women make up nearly half Vermont’s labor force (49 percent) and more than one-quarter of its business owners (26 percent).9

Across the country, many men want to play a larger role in caring for their children, but unsupportive policies and stigma hold them back.10

Vermont families’ care needs are increasing. Paid leave means older adults and disabled people can provide and receive care, and our care workforce is more resilient.

- Three in ten Vermont workers are 55 and older,11 and in the next 20 years, Vermont’s population aged 65 and older will grow by 14,000.12
- Nationwide, nearly one third of all adults aged 55-64 — and 41 percent of older Black women and 43 percent of older Latinas — hold a physically demanding job,13 which may exacerbate or cause serious medical conditions that require care, particularly in older workers and workers with disabilities.14 In Vermont, that would mean 21,500 older workers.15
- About 27 percent of Vermont nursing homes have a shortage of direct care workers.16 Paid leave reduces nursing home utilization and can help recruitment and retention of care workers.17
- An estimated 51,000 Vermonters report having long-term COVID-19 symptoms that affect their daily activities.18 Paid leave is a critical support as we continue through this mass disabling event, which disproportionately impacts women, people of color and workers with low incomes.19
- Paid leave helps family caregivers and disabled people (who are often caregivers themselves) manage their health and care needs while maintaining their income and employment.20

Vermonters need a common sense, national paid leave program. We recommend one that:
- includes all workers, no matter where they live or work or what kind of job they have;
- replaces enough income that workers at any income level can afford leave;
- provides enough time and covers the range of major needs workers face, including addressing their own health conditions, caring for seriously ill, injured or disabled family members and welcoming newborn, newly adopted or foster children;
- provides education and outreach to ease implementation for workers and small businesses;
- has a sustainable funding source that is affordable for workers, employers and the government without harming other essential programs.

A national paid leave plan is the solution

National paid family and medical leave means a stronger economy, healthier families and businesses, and greater equality for all women and families.

To learn more, visit NationalPartnership.org/PaidLeave

2. diversitydatakids.org. (2023, March). Indicators of FMLA Eligibility and Affordability for Working Adults. Retrieved 16 January 2024, from Brandeis University, The Heller School, Institute for Child, Youth and Family Policy website https://data.diversitydatakids.org/dataset?ocab_Subtopic=FMLA&ga=2-14449139.551199344.1673292061-1693714331.1656615545; Workers are considered unable to take unpaid FMLA leave because they are either ineligible based on employer size or job tenure requirements or because 12 weeks of lost wages from unpaid leave would result in their family income dropping to or below 200 percent of the Supplemental Poverty Measure.

11. See note 3.

15. See note 3.

