

How free are women in Wisconsin to decide if, when and how to raise a family?

Women need both access to abortion care, and policies that protect their health and allow them to support themselves and their families.

Least supportive

Most supportive

Abortion Laws: Restrictive

Protective abortion laws mean women can make decisions about their family lives and protect their health.

Medicaid Expansion: Not adopted

Medicaid expansion ensures low-income adults can access health care. That's especially important for women of reproductive age and women of color.

Midwives Recognized: Only CNMs and CPMs

Getting care from Certified Nurse Midwives (CNMs), Certified Professional Midwives (CPMs) and Certified Midwives (CMs) has the same or better outcomes to OB-led care. Midwife care can be more accessible, critical in maternity care deserts.

Doula Medicaid Coverage: No coverage

Medicaid coverage for doula support improves maternal and infant birth outcomes and experiences of care.

Paid Sick Days: No

Paid sick and safe days let people take time off for abortion care, prenatal and well-child visits, domestic violence services and more. That improves everyone's health.

Paid Family and Medical Leave: No

Paid family and medical leave programs give workers time to bond with babies, recover from birth, or take care of their own or a family member's serious health condition.

Fair Pay Laws: Weak

Fair pay laws fight discrimination, which closes pay gaps for women, helping them provide for themselves and their families.

Minimum Wage: Not above $7.25

Raising the minimum wage above the $7.25 federal minimum puts more money in the pockets of workers in low-wage jobs – including millions of women of color.
